Luna Vineyards

A Transformation Takes the Former Niche Winery in a Bold New Direction - With Big Rewards.

BY MICHAEL KOEHN

Since its inception in 1995, Luna Vineyards has held a unique position among Napa Valley wineries. Their focus was concentrated on some of Italy's most popular varietals, including Pinot Grigio and Sangiovese. Their niche approach paid off handsomely, as Luna became one of the largest producers of Pinot Grigio in the Valley by the early 2000s.

After nearly two decades of consistent success with those varietals, in 2015, Luna stakeholders decided to undergo a significant change in strategy, which included the addition of several key members of the leadership team. The new executives brought insights and expertise which strengthened the sense for the art of wine, thus executing a major renovation in image and direction for the winery. Realigning their focus on renowned Napa Valley varietals such as Cabernet Sauvignon, Chardonnay and Pinot Noir, in addition to the Italian varietals, winemaker Shawna Miller began to craft the wines that would put Luna in competition with some of the biggest and most respected wineries in the world.

With an energized, dedicated new team in place and Miller working her alchemy with grapes sourced from Luna's estate vineyards to fit the brand vision, in the last few years the wine world has taken notice. As Luna invested in brand awareness, Nisha Singh joined the team in 2016 as VP of Marketing and began to position the winery in a way that was unique from the industry norm. There was an emphasis on listening to consumer feedback, organizing quarterly branding presentations with Luna's creative team to advance a streamlined brand, and expanding the winery's relationship with the media.

"What I love about Luna is that we're a small workforce, but we all have an exciting entrepreneurial spirit," said Singh. "We honed in on the things that could help us progress in the direction we needed to go. We went out with a really strong message and the media began to take notice. They had a clear image of what the Luna brand was all about."

Luna expanded its high-end Luna Vineyards Black Label Estate series by adding several new wines and launched a new luxury label, Luna Vineyards Winemaker's Reserve. Available to the broad marketplace, the wines in this series are available for $45 to $65 per bottle. With the new branding came a press kit and a well-defined message about the new direction the winery was taking. With the highly-focused organization and Miller's meticulous winemaking, it wasn't long before Luna began to pile up scores well into the nineties for its Estate, Winemaker's Reserve and trade vintages. Not surprisingly, the wines started to sell out quickly. Their Petit Verdot received a gold medal and scored 95 points at the 2018 Decanter World Wine Awards in London and Luna took home numerous awards at judging competitions for their Estate Chardonnay, their flagship Canto Super Tuscan (a blend of Sangiovese, Cabernet and Merlot) and Cabernets.

"And what we kept hearing back was, 'how did you do that?'" said Andre Crisp, Luna's President and CEO.

"What we had achieved relatively quickly was seen as something exceptional and out of the norm. Part of that was seeing ourselves as a boutique, hands-on wine producer, and not a big beverage company."

The other key component in Luna's recent success is the way their operational teams work together. With passionate, committed employees, each of the teams is driven by the desire for making Luna successful. Each department is organized as a business unit, with responsibility for their productivity, and all participate in the winery's success.

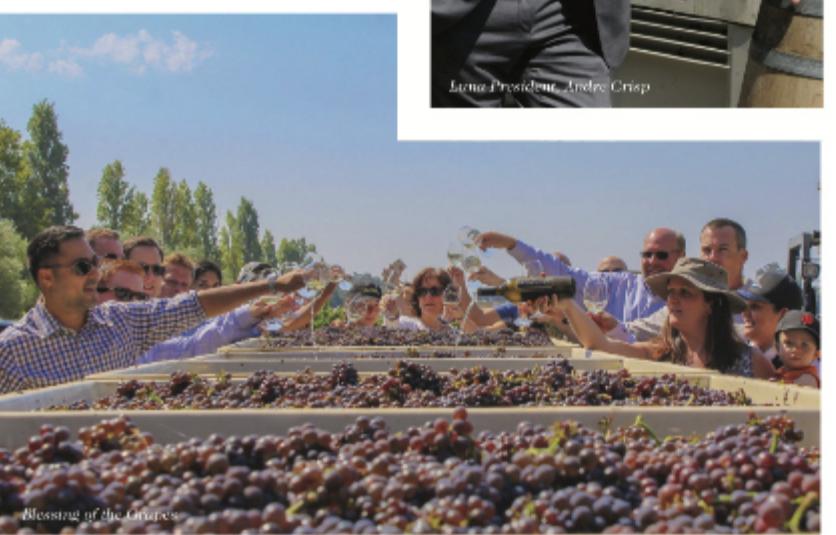

Luna President, Andre Crisp

"Our success has everything to do with the way our teams operate," said Crisp. "It was our collective dream to produce wines that earned 90+ points consistently. Now the industry and consumers are aware of what we're doing. Our hard work has been appreciated and understood, and that, as a vintner, is the validation we look for."

That doesn't mean that Luna will necessarily increase production just to meet the increased demand. "Our commitment is to our members and customers first, and we're content with being a small lot producer," Crisp explained. "Everything we make is carefully managed by human hands. Everything we produce is farmed by hand and bottled by hand here at our facility and we're not looking to add new sources of production. What's gratifying is that, from 1995 to 2015, we'd been making wine for twenty years, and at that point, we transformed ourselves from a niche winery to a winery that is recognized across the wine world at large."

"We haven't neglected the varietals that got us started, but we're excited about the direction and the reception we've had in creating our Estate and Winemaker's Reserve wines," said Singh. "We think we are unique and differentiated, offering more varied wines for a wide group of consumers. We can attract new customers with our expertise in producing core Napa Valley favorites, but we can also say we'd like to introduce you to other interesting varietals, like our Petite Sirah or Petit Verdot."

Shawna Miller was born in Virginia and received a B.S. degree in forestry from Virginia Tech. After visiting Napa Valley, she opted into the wine business. She worked at several Napa Valley wineries, including Beaulieu Vineyards and Rombauer Vineyards. She also worked in New Zealand and Australia, maximizing her learning opportunities. She is currently wine-maker for Luna Vineyards where she has worked for eight years.

We concentrate more on Brix than either TA or pH because we want to keep the alcohol down. We also don't want the grapes to get too ripe because that brings out banana character, which we don't like.

"Grapes are harvested at night and then whole cluster-pressed where they receive 50 ppm SO₂ at the press pan. We use a Champagne cycle on the press, trying to minimize phenolics and bitterness. We usually don't need to make any acid additions. The juice gets a 2 pounds per 1,000 gallon addition of bentonite to compact lees and remove any pinking, and then a 36 hour cold soak at 40° F. We use GoFerm at the start and Fermaid O twice during fermentation, which is carried out between 55° F to 60° F. We use a wide range of yeasts. The wine is fermented mostly in stainless steel tanks with about 40 percent being fermented in five-year-old neutral barrels. Once the wine is dry, we stir the lees weekly for about six months.

"The wine gets racked at bottling, unless we have an issue, where we might rack an additional time. We cold-stabilize by chilling tanks and test to see if additional bentonite is required for heat stability. We sterile-filter using cross-flow filtration and use cork closures. The wine receives two to three months in bottle before release."

According to Miller:

"We are attempting to create a balance between Old World and New World styles of Pinot Grigio. We want crisp fruit notes of citrus, lemon and grapefruit with a rounded mouthfeel. We look for lemon pie aromas with some light flowers, like jasmine, along with lemon custard flavors in the mouth. We try to avoid bitterness and heavy phenolics."

"Our vineyard is adjacent to the river, so our soil is primarily sandy loam at an elevation of 100 feet. Vine spacing is 10x6 feet, and the vineyard is irrigated. Our clones are 146 and 154 planted on 5C and SO4 rootstock to help control vigor. Our farming practices are non-certified organic. We use no pesticides. We will drop fruit to manage crop size and do some canopy thinning, mostly on the shade side, but still want to protect from sunburn. We will thin more heavily in rainy vintages where Botrytis can be an issue."

"To pick, we look for the skins to grey and the seeds to turn brown. We want the flavors to leave the realm of green apples and move to tart lemon or lemon pie."

A photograph of a vineyard at sunset. In the foreground, the dark green leaves of grapevines are silhouetted against the warm, golden light of the setting sun. The vines are trained in a cordon or cane system. In the middle ground, the vineyard extends across a valley, with rolling hills covered in vegetation. The sky is a dramatic mix of orange, yellow, and deep blue, with wispy clouds. A white, rounded rectangular box is positioned in the upper right area of the image, containing the text.

"California Merlot is reaching new heights as vintners hone their formula, including keeping crop yields low in the vineyard and astutely managing tannins in the cellar. Napa Valley maintains its dominance, and both mountain and valley floor bottlings are represented here. Look for POWERFUL and precise versions from mountain districts such as Howell Mountain and Mount Veeder; plusher and ripe flavor profiles are the hallmarks of valley fruit."

WS REVIEW: Medium-grained tannins support the concentrated dark plum, red currant and dried raspberry flavors. Intense minerality lingers on the pure and powerfully focused finish, with plenty of dried savory notes. Drink now through 2025.

JEB'S REVIEW: All from Napa Valley, the medium gold-colored 2018 Chardonnay Winemaker's Reserve offers a rockingly good bouquet of ripe stone fruits, honeyed citrus, toasted bread, and hints of spice. This carries to a rich, full-bodied Chardonnay that has a layered, opulent texture, moderate acidity, and a great finish. Classic Napa Valley goodness all the way, drink it over the coming 2-4 years.

Wine Spectator, May 13, 2019

"There are nearly 800 miles between California's north and south borders, and more than 100 American Viticultural Areas (AVAs) in between. Many of those AVAs are situated near the state's massive coastline, and thus are well-suited to Pinot Noir, which thrives in cooler locales. California's vast reaches are on display in this week's selection, highlighting a variety of Pinot Noir styles from several notable regions, each notching 90 points or higher in recent tastings."

Starting in the south, we have two wines from Sta. Rita Hills: one from Santa Barbara winery Brewer-Clifton, and the other from Napa-based Luna. Both wines go through whole-cluster fermentations and used barrels, yielding balanced expressions of the grape, with structure, earth and spice notes.

Slingshotting to the far north leads us to Masut's Eagle Peak Pinot Noir. Brothers Jake and Ben Fetzer are among the few vintners with vines in this relatively new and mountainous appellation in Mendocino County. The high elevation of the area (between 800 and 3,200 feet) provides ample sun exposure, but also cooler nighttime temperatures, balancing fruit ripeness with fresh acidity. This results in rich and concentrated wines with crunchy acidity.

And don't miss everything in between. Not far from Eagle Peak lies Anderson Valley, where Kendall-Jackson makes a ripe and fruity style. Flowers and CrossBarn offer exemplary coastal versions. Acacia and Morgan also highlight their particular climates with a generous and spicy Carneros Pinot, and a juicy and finely textured version from Santa Lucia Highlands, respectively."
